Tribute Wall

“ Graveside by The Penniless Poet

There stands a lonely and deserted grave

Whereunder lie my father\'s whitened bones

No floral tribute lies beside the stone

But in the breeze the weeds discreetly wave.

Not for long years have visitors been seen;

Scarce could I find the place e\'en should I try

And heartless time goes falter-stepping by

Throughout the seasons brown and white and green.

I think, from time to time, about that place,

And, grievingly, recall a winter\'s day

When shoes, new-cleaned, were soiled by clinging clay

And unchecked tears ran shameless down my face.

I wonder, when I\'ve met eternity,

Will anybody still remember me?
