Jo was my big sister. She was 9 years older than me. I was still a kid in school when she got her first car. A '57 candy apple red Chevy. She loved that car. She looked after me too. She bought me important things my parents couldn't. She bought me my bike. When The Beatles came out she bought me a record player. That made me so happy. When roller skating was the big thing to do, she bought me skates. She did all the things our parents wouldn't. I was so proud she saw me skate at the skating rink with my new skates on. Decades later when we were both getting older, we'd sit and talk about our lives. Because of our age difference we were never on the same page at the same time. I'd talk to her about things that happened in my life. She'd be all surprised and say "I never knew that. Why didn't you tell me?". She was a good person. Never got into trouble or did anything wrong. I was the ornery one. I miss our talks. I miss her. I can't wrap my head around her being gone. I'm glad I told her how much I appreciated the things she got me and how happy it made me to have them. Every year for her birthday I'd get her a special addition Elvis Presley calendar. She went to Graceland, but they didn't have the house open for the public at that time. I felt sad for her because of that. She was a good sister to me. I love and miss her very much.
